(Civil War.) Smith, J. Calvin.
The New Naval And Military Map Of The United States.

Philadelphia,
1863

Large hand-colored engraved wall map on 4 sheets joined. 67x68 inches overall; black wooden rollers, backed on modern canvas with green silk selvage; various staining, cracks and fissures with small scattered losses.

Large patriotic map of Civil War-era North America within a decorative border of stars, vines, and 30 medallion portraits including Abraham Lincoln, other political leaders, and major Union military figures. The eastern geography of the United States is standard for the period, though further west we find several regions on the cusp of border change at the time of this publication: a wide New Mexico and Arizona Territory (becoming the familiarly-shaped separate territories in 1863); Nevada without its southern tip; one large Dakota Territory; a large cascading Washington Territory, but no Idaho Territory (1863), Montana (1864), or Wyoming (1868).

Insets of nationalistic scenes include flag bearers giving the response of the Army and Navy, an allegorical "Rescue of the Union", Battle of Bunker Hill, a panoramic view of Washington, DC, the battle of ironclads Monitor and Merrimac; inset statistical maps show annual rainfall and temperature, distribution of plants, trees, and animals, distribution of slave and free colored populations, along with other tables, profiles and charts.

A Fine Early Seventeenth-Century Italian Celestial Globe

(Globes.) Giuseppe De Rossi; After Jodocus Hondius.
Globus Coelest, In Quo Stellae Fixæ Omnes Quæ A N. Viro Tychone Brahe Suma Cura Observatæ Sunt, Accuratissime Dessignantur: Quibus Adjuncte Sunt Circa Pol. Aust. Stel: Quæ A Pertiss: Nauclero Petro Theodori Annotate Sunt Simul Accomodate Ad Ann. 1614; Æditus Vero Ann. 1615.

[Milan or Rome], 1615

8-inch celestial globe comprised of 12 hand-colored engraved gores, laid horizontally on steel axis pins within a modified turned mahogany stand; globe with only minor unobtrusive wear, green wash applied at original construction aged to an attractive patina, small previous owner's mark to the right of Sagittarius, base with repairs.

The present astral sphere faithfully replicates a slightly earlier globe created by Jodocus Hondius in Amsterdam, 1601; our maker, de Rossi, excludes any acknowledgement to that original source. Whether Rossi used the original Hondius plates versus new gores engraved in Italy, the pert imagery of each emblematic constellation is crisp and dramatic - a delightful way to visualize the celestial skies; the unusual flat format makes for a pleasing overhead tabletop viewing experience.

Edward Luther Stevenson, Terrestrial and Celestial Globes, volume 2, 1921; Peter van der Krogt, Globi Neerlandici.

Estimate

$15,000 – $20,000

(Japanese / Russian Trade Relations.) Imperial Russian Navy Admiral Yevfimiy Putyatin's Diplomatic Fleet At Osaka Bay.

Japan, Kaei 7
(1854)

Color-woodblock kawaraban broadside. 13½x18½ inches, wide margins; folds, mild soiling, skillful old repairs.

Rare color-printed kawaraban depicting Russian Admiral Yevfimiy Vasilyevich Putyatin's squadron entering Osaka Bay in late 1854.

In the wake of American Commodore Matthew Perry's successful opening of Japan in 1853, Putyatin sailed into Osaka attempting to gain an audience with Shogunate officials. After a brief stay, Putyatin found himself ushered from Osaka and was requested to continue to Shimoda where a meeting of diplomatic negotiations would be arranged. As the fleet sat anchored at Shimoda on December 23, 1854, a tremendous earthquake struck the area causing a tsunami which destroyed the fleet and damaged the flagship Diana's hull beyond repair. With a collaborative effort between the Russians and local Japanese carpenters a schooner was built in a matter of months that was large enough to carry Putyatin and his crew back to their homeland. This was the first western-style ship built in Japan and an early instance of Japanese learning western technology, models of which were quickly incorporated into their own naval fleets.

Before departing, Putyatin and Japanese officials negotiated the Treaty of Shimoda, ending Japan's centuries-long policy of international isolationism. The treaty opened Japan's ports to Russian commerce and defined the northern territorial borders between the two Empires.

Offset Color-Lithographed Japanese Pictorial Map Of Europe At The Outset Of World War I.

Tokyo, Taisho 3
(1914)

21½x31 inches; old folds, two small stains and minor edge wear.

Manga-style map depicting naval positioning and troop movements with large caricatures of British, Russian, French, German, Austrian, and Serbian soldiers.

together with: Ashura Cho. Volume of 100 color woodblock cartoons with printed captions. 8vo format, 10x8½ inches, original woodblock-printed paper boards stitched with heavy cord, minor rubbing. Japan, Taisho 10 (1921).

Among other general topics, some themes involve World War I and the wake of the war, the Siberian Intervention (or Siberian Expedition), and international politics - including a cartoon depicting Woodrow Wilson's defeat of Charles Evans Hughes in the 1916 American presidential election.

Estimate

$700 – $1,000

(Japan – World War Ii.) Japanese Imperial Naval Office. Dai Toa Senso Sekai Yozu.

Japan, Showa 17
(1942)

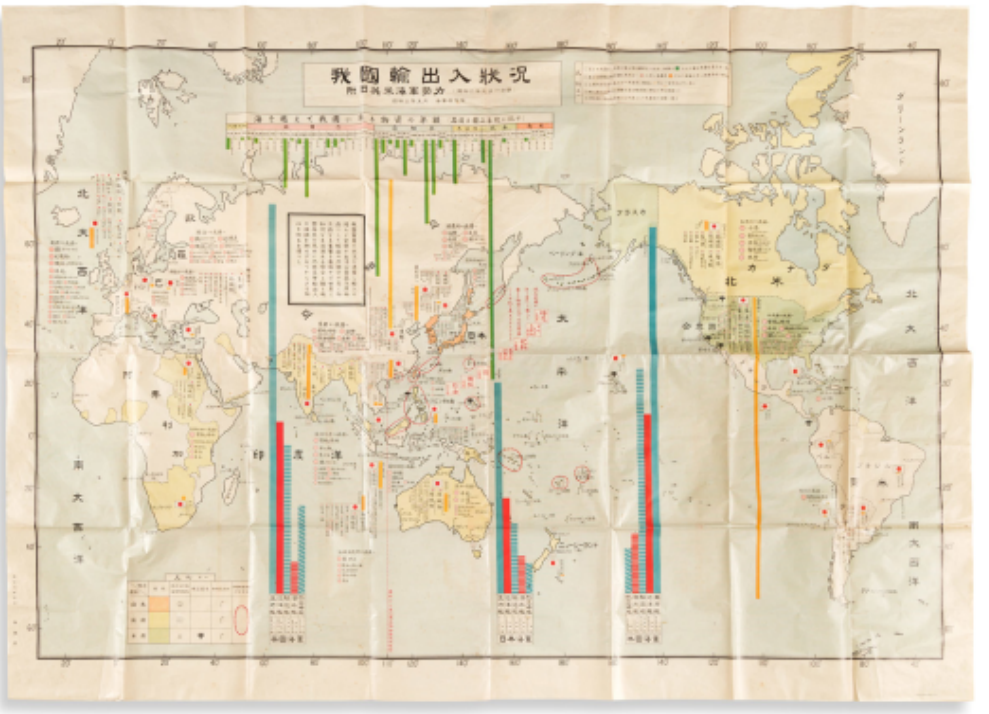
Large offset color-printed Japanese naval intelligence map of the world on 4 sheets joined. 42x84 inches overall; folded, generally fine with minor spots of foxing and occasional irregular folds.

Published by the Japanese Naval Office one year into World War II, this monumentally-sized chart shows the world at war and records all the major Japanese naval conflicts from December 8, 1941 to November 1942. Focusing on the Pacific theater, some noted battles and events include Pearl Harbor, Battle of Midway, Battle of the Coral Sea, the sinking of the U.S.S. Lexington, the invasion of the Aleutians and Japanese submarines off the California coast for the bombardment of Ellwood.

Estimate

$1,500 – $2,500

Lot 44



44 ♦

(Japan – World War Ii.) Japanese Ministry Of The Navy. Wagakuni Yushu Tsunyu Jokyo.

Japan, Showa 3

Enormous offset color-printed data visualization map of the world on 4 sheets joined. 58½x81 inches overall; folded, generally excellent with only minor scattered foxing.

Oversized chart referencing trade goods, raw materials, and other economic resources around the world, but with particular concentration on the naval strengths of Great Britain (vertical bar graph at left), Japan (center), and the United States (right); a focused intelligence chart by the Japanese Naval Department demonstrating the Empire's vulnerability as compared to other world powers. The Washington Naval Treaty of 1922 limited the Allied nations of World War I from naval construction in the hopes of avoiding an international arms race; The London Naval Treaty of 1930 (two years after this map was published) sought to further increase regulations. Within several years Japan had officially renounced these sanctions with an eye towards major naval expansion, a clear concern and goal illustrated by this map, and an obvious indication that conflict was brewing.

(Korea.) Hayashi Shihei; After. Chosen Koku Zenzu.

Japan, Tenmei 5
(1785)

Large manuscript map of the Kingdom of Korea. Ink and watercolor on 4 sheets of thin paper joined, 30x22 inches overall; old folds, minor early repairs.

Hayashi Shihei, a Japanese scholar with military interests, put forth one of the earliest attempts to define the boundaries of Japan with a concern for security and national defense in his work Sangoku Tsuran Zusetsu (Illustrated General Survey of the Three Countries). Shihei's book was banned by the government in 1792 and practically all copies were destroyed. The maps within the book were preserved and perpetuated in manuscript copies, such as the present. The map delineates the peninsula of Korea and surrounding islands, notably showing Takeshima/Dokdo, whose claim has long been disputed with Japan.

(New Orleans.) Benjamin Moore Norman.
Norman's Plan Of New Orleans & Environs.

New Orleans: B.M.
Norman, 1845

Hand-colored engraved pocket map of New Orleans with concentric distance circles at ¼-mile intervals and a 71-point keyed reference legend below. 18x24½ inches overall, folding into publisher's 12mo format gilt-and-blind-stamped red roan case; modest strengthening to a few fold versos but on the whole exceptionally well preserved; publisher's printed shop ticket pasted to inside cover.

A beautiful copy of an apparently unrecorded pocket map.

In 1845 Benjamin Norman published his guidebook to New Orleans which included a very similar engraved plan of the city with credit given to Henry Mollhausen for the survey. That "first" edition is itself quite scarce however, no standard references we've consulted cite the variant pocket version seen here.

In the present plate quite a few engraved differences can be found when compared to the 1845 guide version: a different script is used at the title; Mollhausen's name does not appear; our reference key notes 71 locations versus 80; a larger explanation and scale table is here; riverfront treatment differs; and frankly on closer inspection one realizes this is an altogether different plan covering less area and with less toponym detail, features which lead us to surmise it was separately published and pre-dates the "first" guidebook edition.

(Pictorial Maps.) The Crawfords. Group Of 21 Hand-Printed Textile Maps.

Jamestown, RI, late
1940's/early 1950's

Variously colored screen-prints on cotton fabric.
Approximately 12x18 inches each; occasional light foxing.

A marvelous suite of mid-20th-century pictorial placemat maps hand-fashioned by a little-known husband and wife duo, George and Margaret Crawford, at their home in Jamestown, Rhode Island.

Each map offers appropriately simplified geographic detail with pleasant, familiar, illustrated emblems - they are very distinctive with a certain retro kitsch appeal. Titles include:

* Northern California and Nevada.

* Southern California/Arizona.

* Oregon/Idaho.

* The Great Lakes.

* Door County/Green Bay, Wisconsin.

* [Northern] Michigan.

* Detroit and Vicinity.

* North Carolina.

* South Carolina/Georgia.

* State of Florida and Gulf of Mexico.

* Suburban Philadelphia.

* Washington D.C./Del-Mar-Va.

* New York City/Manhattan I.

* Long Island.

* Adirondacks/Thousand Islands, New York.

* Vermont.

* Cape Cod.

* Nantucket.

* Watch Hill, Rhode Island.

* Block Island, R.I.

* Chart from Newport to Bermuda.

(Pictorial Maps – Data Viz.) Roy Wenzlick & Co.
A Century Of Real Estate Trends. [And] Basic Barometers Of Real Estate Trends.

St. Louis, 1951; 1952

Together two large-scale offset color printed broadside charts presenting data-driven maps and diagrams relating to mid-20th century United States real estate and housing statistics. 24x39¼ inches each sheet size; occasional soft creasing though no major flaws; original shipping tube with Wenzlick & Co. label addressed to a San Francisco capital investor.

Two outstanding visual charts compiled by Roy Wenzlick, a prominent 20th-century real estate economist group.

"A Century of Real Estate Trends" - the central map illustrates Percentage Change in the Number of Dwelling Units by Counties: 1940 to 1950; the panels at top and bottom chart Real Estate Activity and Business Activity from 1850 to 1950; a series of graphs at left center shows the Construction Cost of Six Standard Buildings (California bungalow, five-room brick house, six-room frame house, six-room brick house, 18-family brick apartment building, and a 30-unit concrete apartment building); at right center are shown Factors Affecting Real Estate Sales and Values from 1900 to 1950 (such as building material costs, mortgage activity, residential interest rates, etc.); Corporate Earnings, Dividends and Taxes from 1940 to 1950; Trend in Farm Values from 1910 to 1950; and Shrinkage in the Purchasing Power of the Dollar from 1939 to 1950 (represented by stacks of pennies and value decreased by almost half in the short timeframe).

"Basic Barometers of Real Estate Trends" - main map presents Percentage of Change in Total Population by Counties: 1940 to 1950; the upper panel delineates Real Estate and Business Activity from 1850 to 1950; below that is Shrinkage in the Purchasing Power of the Dollar from 1900 to 1950 (with an even more depressing decrease than the earlier pattern); at left are seen Construction Costs Continue to Climb; Factors Affecting New Building; Taxes, Savings and Expenditures; Farm Value, Taxes and Income; at lower right are six graphs showing Regional Patterns of Real Estate Activity from 1890 to 1950 (New England, East Central, West Central, South, South, Southwest and West Coast) with notations pointing out the model of an 18-year cycle of booms and depressions to the market.

OCLC locates no more than three examples of each sheet, with the Milwaukee County Public Library listed as the only institution owning both.

Melish, John; And Henry Schenck Tanner, Engraver.
Map Of The Seat Of War In North America.

Philadelphia,
[circa 1812]

Hand-colored engraved map of northeastern North America printed on "T.Gilpin & Co./1810" watermarked laid paper. 14¾x22¼ inches sheet size, margins shaved close; staining at right, repaired horizontal tear throughout.

Separately published first issue of a map which was subsequently re-engraved to be included in Melish's 1813 "Military and Topographical Atlas of the United States".

As Melish writes on page 3 of that work: "The first map in the list is The Seat of War in North America. Previous to the declaration of war, the author had travelled extensively in the north and west parts of the United States, collecting authentic information regarding the present state of the country, and had moved to Philadelphia to put his travels to press. Knowing how unsatisfactory topographical and statistical information is without good maps, particular attention was paid to select the best and most authentic maps in the country, from which to construct those for the travels. While engaged in drawing them, a much valued friend [Henry Schenck Tanner] suggested the propriety of drawing a general map of the seat of war, and proffered the use of a very ample set of excellent maps in his possession. Of these, the author gladly availed himself; the map was produced, and immediately received the stamp of public approbation. It sold so rapidly, that the first plate was soon worn out, and a new one has since been brought forward, enlarged and much improved."

The present map is slightly smaller and significant differences of engraving can be seen when compared to that of the version found in the "Atlas". This edition not in Phillips.

(Japanese / Russian Trade Relations.) Manuscript Report Of Imperial Russian Navy Admiral Yevfimiy Putyatin's Diplomatic Visit To Japan.

Japan, Kaei 7
(1854)

27 manuscript pages including a sketch of Putyatin's flagship Diana, and a map of her entrance into Osaka Bay. 8vo format, 10x7 inches, cord stitched; small amount of worm track.

Russian Admiral Yevfimiy Vasilyevich Putyatin played an instrumental role in negotiating commercial relations between Japan and Russia. The Treaty of Shimoda, signed in 1855 between the two empires, opened Japan's ports to Russian commerce.

In late 1854 Putyatin arrived with his squadron at Osaka Bay causing a great panic among the Shogunate, as related in this contemporary document. The Russians were shortly thereafter directed on to Shimoda for a more comfortable setting to hold diplomatic negotiations. On December 23, 1854, the day prior to a planned meeting with Shogunate officials, a massive earthquake hit the area causing a great tsunami which destroyed the Russian ships. Local Japanese tradesmen worked together with the Russians to build a new boat large enough to sail Putyatin and his crew back to their homeland. This was the first western-style ship built in Japan and an early instance of Japanese learning western technology. The vessel, dubbed "Heda", was completed in a matter of months and after finalizing the trade treaty in spring 1855, the Russians dispatched for home.

together with: Woodblock report of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between Japan and Russia. 44 pages, 8vo format, 9x6¼ inches, plain wrappers; small amount of worm track. [1858].

(Myanmar / Burma – Sketchbooks.) Group Of 3 Albums Containing Ethnographic Watercolor Portraits Of Local Peoples, Market Scenes, And Festivities Of The Shan State's Kengtung Region.

Kengtung, Shan State, Burma (Myanmar), 1908

"Kengtung Types" - 2 volumes. 34 pages of ink and gouache drawings. Oblong 8vo, 7½x11½ inches, original slightly worn blue cloth; typewritten titles pasted to upper covers (one label partially lost), typewritten index and explanation sheets pasted to inside covers; minor scattered soiling.

"Kengtung Occasions" - Book II only. 30 pages of ink and watercolor drawings. Oblong 8vo, 7¼x10¼ inches, original calf-backed cloth boards, spine defective; typewritten title pasted to upper cover (partially torn), typewritten index and explanation sheet pasted to inside cover; minor scattered soiling.

"These pictures were drawn at my request in 1908 by a Hkön artist of Kengtung, the sketch books being provided." - from the typewritten title-labels with ink signature, possibly reading "Ri'd [Richard] Phillimore."

Wonderful bespoke souvenir-type albums for an early 20th-century visitor to Kengtung in the eastern region of Shan State, Myanmar (formerly Burma). Each plate is captioned in Shan script and corresponds with the English explanation on the typed index leaf.

The "Types" albums depict tribal villagers and hill people in various colorful dress with personal effects such as smoking pipes, parasols, weapons and hunting instruments, as well as several representations of goods production and farming.

The drawings in the "Occasions" volume are generally more thematic, showing scenes of festivals, processions, and ceremonies, lighting fireworks, various sellers of cigars, liquor, noodle soup, and fruits at market, musical entertainment, animal hunting, and other exotic portrayals.

ALBUM
OF RUSSIAN LIFE AND NATURE

Snowplaying

A Feast of Prince Wladimir

198 ♦

(Russia.) St. Petersburg Picturesque Review.
Album Of Russian Life And Nature In Pictures In Watercolors Peinted [Sic] By The Russian Artist N.N. Karazin.

St. Petersburg: S. Dobrodeew, 1892

English title-page printed in gold, 15 chromolithographs after Karazin mounted to black cards with gold-printed ruling and English captions. Oblong 4to, 9½x14 inches, publisher's cloth with chromolithographed pictorial title-plate pasted to upper cover, rebacked and re-guarded with sympathetic cloth, small scrapes and stains; mounts with minor edge wear, plates fine; gift inscription on pictorial stationary from U.S. Consulate General to Russia, J.M. Crawford, to Dr. Thomas DeWitt Talmage pasted to inside front cover.

A vestige of appreciation for one man's kindness: presentation copy of an uncommon album from U.S. Russian Consulate General J.M. Crawford, on behalf of its publisher, to Reverend Dr. Thomas DeWitt Talmage who in 1892 orchestrated the delivery of a ship's-load of food and relief aid to Russian provinces during their period of great famine. The American clergyman's humanitarian effort was received with utmost appreciation and his visiting circle were given an enthusiastic reception by the Russians, culminating in an audience with Tsar Alexander III.

The inscription reads: "July 17, 1892. Dear Dr. Talmage: The Picturesque Review of St. Petersburg desires me to offer you the accompanying album of Russian scenes as a petit souvenir of your humane mission to this country. Very sincerely yours, J.M. Crawford".

The fine vernacular chromolithographs are after oil paintings by Russian military officer and artist Nikolay Nikolaevich Karazin.

OCLC locates a single copy of the album, Yale University. See T. DeWitt Talmage, His Life and Work, pages 199-224 for a lengthy description of Talmage's Russian experience.

(Sketchbooks.) Alma Bertha Bertsch; And/Or Marguerite Bertsch. Album Of Approximately 60 Juvenile Pen And Ink Drawings.

[New York City,
1897]

4to, 10¾x8¾ inches, printed pictorial album covers, spine rebacked with plain paper and defective; sketches either loose or mounted to brittle album leaves, scattered offset and trimming.

"Album of 1897" in ink on front pastedown: the drawings are generally skillful for a child's hand and include portraits, architecture, arbor, still-life, fashionable hats, furniture and home furnishings, nursery rhymes, seasonal allegories, birds, animals, and other late 19th-century subjects.

The names of Alma-Bertha Bertsch and Margarethe [sic] Bertsch appear at separate places in large stylized calligraphy. The two sisters were born in New York City in 1885 and 1887 respectively. Their younger brother, Karl Alfred was born in 1889; one of the drawings depicts an age-appropriate boy wearing a sailor's uniform and cap lettered "Karl". Alma Bertha spent her career as an educator and real estate broker in New York City; Marguerite also started off as a school teacher but for a brief period in the mid-to-late 19-teens she enjoyed an occupation as a screenwriter and silent film director with Vitagraph Studios, a prominent early 20th-century Brooklyn production company.

(Death Of Wolfe.) Sebastian Leclerc Ii, After.
Mort Du Brave Lieutenant Volf.

Np, last quarter 18th-century

Hand-colored historical mezzotint engraved by Joseph A. Clarot. 13¾ x 13¾ inches sheet size, trimmed to platemark.

A pseudo-re-imagining of Benjamin West's famous 1770 painting, "The Death of General Wolfe," which depicts a pivotal event of the French and Indian War. The composition is quite different from West's, but the prone figure of Wolfe cradled by his compatriots is certainly familiar. However, the sub-caption reading "du Regiment des Licaniens à l'attaque du Closter Boisig dans la campagne de 1778. 1. Le Prince de Ligne, Field Marechal Lieutenant. 2. le Prince Charles, Son Fils et Son Adjudant Lieutenant au Corps du Genie" would seem to place the figures of this scene more accurately within the context of the 1778 War of Bavarian Succession.

The print is unusually rare, we find no copies in OCLC, and none at auction since an 18 October 1912 Puttick & Simpson sale, "Death of Wolfe, by J. Clarot, mezzotint" for £1, 8s.

New York: G.Q. Colton, 1859

Large format chromolithograph by Sarony, Major & Knapp after the 24-foot painting by Peale. 19¾x29¾ inches sheet size, wide margins; registration pin holes, moderate foxing.

The title-margin text explains this complex allegory, with the dark central figure of Death resting upon the corpse of a youth stricken down in the vigor of health. The Reaper is attended on the right by agents of war, conflagration, famine and pestilence. At left are intemperance, pleasure, remorse, suicide, despair, fever, apoplexy, etc. Old Age approaches Death undaunted, firmly supported by a figure symbolizing his Christian faith. GUY FAUX'S DYING SPEECH

I Guy Faux meditating my Countrys ruin by the clandestine and diabolical means of Gunpowder Plot, was most fortunately discovered and brought to condign punishment by Old England, and here I bewail my fate.

NAPOLEON BUONAPARTES DYING SPEECH.

I Napoleon Buonaparte flattered by all the French Nation that I was invincible have most cruelly and most shamefully attempted the subjugation of the World. I have lost my fleets, I have lost the largest and finest armies ever heard of and I am now become the indignation of the World, and the scorn and sport of boys. Had I not spurned the former wisdom of the Rig.t Hon.r W.m Pitt I might have secured an honourable Peace. I might have governed the greatest Nation but Alas my ambition has deceived me and Pitts plans have ruined me.
